

3493. Putting Radiation Protection Information on the Internet

The health physicist's role as an information provider is becoming increasingly important. A health physicist often needs to communicate effectively with the public, radiation users, and other radiation protection professionals. As the Internet becomes increasingly more important as a communications medium, radiation protection professionals and others in the field must learn what tools are available on the Internet to provide information, and how best to utilize them.

Taken from: Woo, Melissa, "Putting Radiation Protection Information on the Internet," Radiation Protection Management, Vol. 13, No. 6, November/December 1996, pp. 37-40.